Summary Report

Food microbiology encompasses the study of microorganisms which have both beneficial and deleterious effects on the quality and safety of raw and processed meat, poultry, and egg products. Food microbiology focuses on the general biology of the microorganisms that are found in foods including: their growth characteristics, identification, and pathogenesis. Specifically, areas of interest which concern food microbiology are: food poisoning, food spoilage, food preservation, and food legislation. Pathogens in product, or harmful microorganisms, result in major public health problems in the United States as well as worldwide and is the leading causes of illnesses and death.

It is important for you as a PHV to understand some of these basics because they have an effect on the meat, poultry, and egg products that FSIS regulates. In this module, we'll cover a brief overview of some of the basic principles of food microbiology and explain how they apply to meat, poultry, and egg products. Also we will review the FSIS microbiological sampling programme

FOODBORNE ILLNESS

Microorganisms can cause a variety of effects in food products including spoilage, which primarily affects product quality, and food poisoning, which is generally caused by pathogens. As regulators, we are most concerned with the effects that microorganisms have on food that leads to food borne illness, because this affects public health. A food borne illness (or disease) is exactly what the term indicates - a disease or illness caused by the consumption of contaminated foods or beverages. It would seem rather obvious that a food borne microbial pathogen, or a preformed microbial toxic product, or another poison such as a poisonous chemical that has somehow contaminated the food and/or beverage, leads to one of the many different food borne illnesses.

There is no one “syndrome” that is representative of food borne illness/disease. Different diseases have many different symptoms. However, the microbe or toxin enters the body through the gastrointestinal tract, and often causes the first clinical signs such as nausea, vomiting, abdominal cramps and diarrhoea which are common symptoms in many food borne diseases.

More than 250 different food borne diseases have been described. Most of these diseases are infections, caused by a variety of bacteria, viruses, and parasites. Other diseases are poisonings, caused by harmful toxins or chemicals that have contaminated the food, for example, poisonous mushrooms or heavy metal contamination.

There are several hurdles that the pathogen must overcome in order to cause illness. A simple summary of these hurdles are as follows. -Survive the acidic environment of the stomach.

- Attach to/colonize intestinal walls.
- Compete against the natural microbiota of the gut.
- Survive the host defence mechanisms.
- Once attached in the large intestine: elaborate toxins and virulence factors, and
- cross the epithelial barrier, which then results in the symptoms characteristic to the diseases or illness.

COURSE OUTCOMES:

1. Understand the significance and activities of various microorganisms in Food.
2. Ability to learn the different preservation techniques such as low temperature, freezing, etc., chemical preservation to prevent food spoilage and contamination.
3. Know the important spoilage organisms and their mechanisms in foods and thus identify methods to control.
4. It provides the knowledge on the basis of food safety regulations and the use of standard methods and procedures for the microbiological analysis of food.
5. It helps students to know the beneficial role of microorganisms in fermented foods and in food processing.
6. It also helps students to study the food borne diseases and their outbreaks along with their investigation methods.
7. This course provides knowledge on the role of food micro-biota in spoilage, contamination and Preservation.
8. This course helps students to enumerate microbial flora of different foods.

Summary

11th February 2019 to 11th March 2019

Department of English has run a Certificate Course in Functional English, in the academic years during the assessment period. In the year 2018-19, 25 students have registered for this course. The induction program for the newly admitted students was conducted in the library hall. Dr. Renuka L. Roy was the coordinator of the course. During this programme, the aims and objectives of running this course was explained to the students and they were endorsed to take admission and get benefitted. The course designed by the Department of English, S. K. Porwal College, Kamptee and approved by B.C.U.D, R.T.M.N.U., Nagpur was run throughout the session. The entire curriculum was divided into the modules spanning 60 hours. The modules focused on reading skills, writing skills, spoken skills, phonetics and grammar etc. The teaching hours were divided into practical and theory sessions in the ratio of 2:4. During the practical sessions, the students are encouraged to use self-learning device i.e. Lingua-phone software and other e-learning contents provided by the teachers from time to time.

The course outcome of Functional English:

1. By the end of the course, the students acquires the required practical skills of English knowledge like writing for special purpose, doing basic communication using English as the target language, using correct grammar in speaking and writing etc.
2. The students from vernacular medium background developed confidence in use of English through continuous drill and practice.
3. The course offers extra practice hours and exposure of English language.

UNIT-II (Reading Skills)

Q.3. A. Read the following passage and answer the following questions: 10

Ranjit Singh the Lion of the Punjab, was once walking the road with his followers, when suddenly a stone struck him on the head. He suffered greatly and his followers brought before him a woman bent with age and dressed in rags. The poor woman was trembling. "your highness," said the woman with folded hands, "my children have been hungry for three days. I search for food I came here and saw ripe apples hanging from the branches, threw a stone at them in the hope of getting one or two to satisfy my children's hunger, but the stone missed its aim and struck your highness, I am innocent. Please forgive me." Pressing his wounded head with one hand, the King ordered his Prime Minister to give the woman several bags of grains and pay her one thousand rupees. The Prime Minister stared at the king. "If the lifeless tree gave fruit when struck with stones," said the king, "I must give much more since I am alive and have reason. How can I punish her?"

Questions-

1. What happened when Ranjit Singh was once walking along the road?
2. Why was the old woman brought before Ranjit Singh?
3. Why did the woman try to get the apples?
4. Did Ranjit Singh punish the woman? What did he do?
5. What lesson did he learn from the tree?

B) Read the following passage and answer the following questions: 8

I lose so many things that I could swear they just get up and walk away. Perhaps I have never admitted it- even to myself, but I am extremely jealous of people who are so orderly that they never lose anything. Most of my friends always seem to have a place for everything and everything is in its place. I hate comparing myself with them. They have special cupboards for tools, hooks to hang things on and drawers to put things in. It is quite impossible for me to compete with them.

Some things have terrible habit of making themselves scarce the moment I need them. Pencils and ball-point pens are never anywhere near the telephone when it rings, no matter how much care I take. Screwdrivers and tin-openers always manage to wander out into the garden and, as a result, screws remain loose and the tins remain unopened. Boxes of matches slide under the radio, and needles disappear every time I want to sew a button on a shirt.

The situation was getting so much out of control that I decided to organize myself. I had a large cupboard put into the kitchen. On the shelves I neatly arranged number boxes and tins, the contents of which I clearly printed in ink on the outside. I had on box for pins, another for nails, and a special place for screwdrivers. There was a new address book in one corner so that I could make a note of telephone numbers and addresses. Before this I had always written addresses on bits of paper - which I promptly lost. Soon, everything was tidily arranged in its place, from pairs of scissors to cakes of soap and spare lamps. Having made such a sincere attempt to prevent things from running away, I felt very proud of myself. But it was not long before the matches disappeared and the hammer decided to hide itself in the waste-paper basket. I soon got my revenge, however. I had a lock fitted to the cupboard and thus made sure that nothing could escape. This was an admirable solution - until I lost the key to the cupboard.

Questions:

1. Why does the writer hate comparing himself with others?
2. When does the writer need pencils and ball-point pens?
3. Why does he need needles?
4. Why do screws remain loose and tins unopened?
5. How does he try to organize himself?
6. What is the writer's main problem?
7. Is he able to manage his problem?
8. What happens in the end?

C. Prepare a precise of the given passage.

04

It is very easy to acquire bad habits, such as eating too much food, or drinking too much of fluid of any kind, or smoking. The more we do a thing, the more we tend to like doing it; and, if we do not continue to do it, we feel unhappy. Such tendency should be fought against. Things which may be very good when only done from time to time, tend to become very harmful when done too often and too much. This applies even to such good things as work or rest. Some man always form a bad habit of working too much, and others of idling too much. The wise man always remembers that this is true of him, and checks any bad habit. He says to himself, "I am now becoming idle," and then adds, "I will get myself out of this bad habit at once."

I search for food I came here and saw ripe apples hanging from the branches, threw a stone at them in the hope of getting one or two to satisfy my children’s hunger, but the stone missed its aim and struck your highness, I am innocent. Please forgive me.” Pressing his wounded head with one hand, the King ordered his Prime Minister to give the woman several bags of grains and pay her one thousand rupees.
